

We had an in-school field trip to the NSHS art gallery to meet with Deena Qadir, a senior whose final project was a collection of works that use words and images to convey meaning. She explained the inspiration for her work and addressed our essential question: What is the relationship between words and images? The students were asked to choose a work, take a picture of it, and write a reflection about it.

The students used the poem "Left," by Nikky Finney, as inspiration for their own visual representations of the poem. They were asked to find examples of imagery in her poem and create a collage of words (from the text) and corresponding images that gave an overall feeling for what the poem is about.
